The COVID-19 pandemic has seen us all struggle with the impacts of isolation. Consider becoming a certified long-term care Ombuds and combat that isolation with community and purpose.

Long-term care ombuds visit residents who live in nursing homes and other long-term care facilities weekly. They provide information and help problem solve complaints. They provide residents with the tools to self-advocate.

Volunteers work with each other and staff. We have an incredible team of experienced ombuds who guide and train volunteers to be successful!

"I find it enlightening and rewarding to have conversations with people that are not just mundane. To let them be expressive about their experiences"
- Janet Callis, Certified Ombuds King County

"Some residents don't have anyone. Some are in facilities that are far away from home. Sometimes just saying a few words and making sure they know you're there for them makes a huge difference."
- Skip Harrold, Certified Ombuds Walla Walla County

"[They were] really suffering an injustice. I was mad to see injustice, and I wanted them to get a solution. I wanted there to be someone to represent them."
- Marilyn Fisher, Certified Ombuds Wenatchee County
